

HIGH LITTLETON LAND TAX ASSESSMENTS 1766/7-1831/2 (with gaps)

HISTORY OF LAND TAX

Land Tax was first assessed and imposed as a tax on land in 1692. A quota was fixed for each county, which then broke down and redistributed the quota over all the parishes in the county, who, in turn, divided their quota equitably amongst the proprietors of land in the parish. Originally, movable property and salaries were also taxed, but because of difficulties in collection, assessments were restricted to land, tithes, some buildings and offices of profit.

The tax was imposed annually from 1697 onwards, but still based on the assessments made in 1692.

Very few assessments survive nationally until around the 1760's and then only spasmodically until 1780. In the case of High Littleton, the oldest surviving assessment is for 1766. High Littleton was required to raise the sum of £80.14/- each year, at a rate of 4/- in the £ on the amount of the assessment of each proprietor's property. The amount to be collected, rate in the £ and assessment, did not change over the period of 60 years for which records have been preserved.

The Vestry appointed annually two persons for the parish (normally one from Hallatrow and one from High Littleton) to act as assessors of Land Tax. Their job was to draw up a list of amounts to be collected from each proprietor (including copyholders) for the year ahead. It was therefore necessary for changes in proprietorship, for whatever reason, to be reflected in the current list. Very often the amount to be collected exceeded the quota to be raised for the parish, as the assessors erred on the side of caution in assessing bits of land that had been split up or changed hands.

The Vestry also appointed two persons as collectors of Land Tax each year. For many years the custom was to appoint as assessors, the two persons who had been collectors in the preceding year. From the beginning of the nineteenth century, this custom was often broken, with assessors or collectors continuing in office for two or more years or the same person being assessor and collector at the same time.

When the annual assessment had been made, it was required to be approved by Commissioners, which normally consisted of three local Justices of the Peace.

The early format for the assessments was very simple and consisted of a list of proprietors, in some cases with the name of the late proprietor, and the amount to be collected. In 1772, the returns were enlarged to include the names of occupiers as well as proprietors.

From 1780, a duplicate copy of the Land Tax assessment had to be lodged with the Clerk of the Peace and was used to establish the qualification of parliamentary voters. Until 1832, when the Reform Act was passed and when Land Tax was abolished in this form, these duplicate copies represent the vast majority of all surviving assessments.

In 1798, Land Tax was made perpetual, but landowners were afforded the opportunity of redeeming the tax on their land on payment of 15 years' purchase. Once redeemed, the land was exonerated from future payment of tax. Details of land which had been exonerated were shown separately on the returns, because, although nothing was payable, it was still necessary to demonstrate that everything had been accounted for, as well as providing the information for voting qualifications.

From 1802 the tax was administered under the Land Tax Redemption Act. As the years progressed, more owners redeemed the Land Tax on their property. By 1804, 45% of the Land Tax had been redeemed in High Littleton.

Pre-printed forms were first used by High Littleton assessors in 1823. These forms included a new column for Description of Premises, as well as sub-dividing Sums Purchased, between Exonerated and Not Exonerated. This subtle difference was dropped in 1826, when sums assessed were either exonerated or not. At the same time, the description of premises was enlarged to include names of property - not that many rural properties boasted a name.

Land Tax in a different form continued until 1963, when it was finally abolished.

The transcriptions of the Assessments retain the original spelling, which, at times, can be best described as phonetic. Certain liberties have been taken with the original returns, in that the order in which details were listed has been rearranged by placing proprietors' names in alphabetical order. For that reason no index has been made. It is apparent that in some cases, the compiler of one year's list has copied the previous year's list, one column at a time, and, by virtue of an omission, contrived to get the lines "out of synch." This has been corrected in these transcriptions. Only fragments of the return for 1790/1 exist, but it has been possible to reconstruct it. Italics indicate where blatant errors and omissions have been corrected or notes added by the transcriber.

Returns exist and have been transcribed for the following years:

1766/7 and 1767/8
1781/2 to 1785/6
1788/9 to 1831/2

Furthermore some proprietors' names were omitted from their correct place and have been added in at the end, whilst the corresponding occupiers appear in the places originally intended. Proprietors and occupiers have been correctly married up in this transcription.]
